

Northeast Wisconsin Technical College presents:
The Many Motives for Murder

As most homicide professionals know, there are numerous motives for taking another person's life. Reasons can include sex, greed, hate, revenge, and more. Actually, in the mind of the killer, the list can be endless. This year's training seminar will dissect many motives for murder offering attendees a global look at "reasons killers kill".

Each presenter will delve into the who, where, how, when as well as the why's of murder. Finding a motive for the killing can make the investigation so much easier. In an effort to dig deeply into the many motives for murder, this year's training seminar will not only offer general sessions, but will present attendees with motive-specific tracks. Professionals will be able to put motives "under a microscope" and obtain answers into the ever-present questions....why do they kill?

General sessions will include home invasion murders and sexual assault and murder of elderly women; horror rock and violence, and the brutal killing of a little girl and the systems approach to solving this crime. Tracks will offer motives for mass/domestic murder, and investigating drug killings. Various speakers will address specialized topics and each will enhance the previous session. (Each track is timed so attendees can move from session-to-session and still achieve pertinent information).

At the conclusion of this training seminar, professionals from all areas of the criminal justice will have a better understanding of the Motives for Murder.
